Methadone Treatment for Opioid Dependence: How it Works

Methadone is a Schedule II controlled substance, a synthetic opioid that has been used to treat opioid use disorder (OUD) for over 60 years. It works by binding to the same receptors in the brain as other opioids, such as heroin and prescription painkillers, but with a slower, more consistent absorption rate. This helps to:

1. Reduce cravings and withdrawal symptoms
2. Block the high associated with other opioids
3. Allow individuals to gradually transition away from illicit or excessive opioid use

When taken as directed, methadone can help stabilize patients and provide a stable foundation for further treatment, such as counseling and behavioral therapies.
